One of the greatest story collections in the English language—an unflinching, brilliant, often tragic portrait of early twentieth-century Dublin, with a new introduction by John Banville.

Summary: With these fifteen stories James Joyce reinvented the art of fiction, using a scrupulous, deadpan realism to convey truths that were at once blasphemous and sacramental. Whether writing about the death of a fallen priest (“The Sisters”), the petty sexual and fiscal machinations of “Two Gallants,” or of the Christmas party at which an uprooted intellectual discovers just how little he really knows about his wife (“The Dead”), Joyce takes narrative places it had never been before.

Summary: In Under the Black Flag, David Cordingly gave us a definitive, sweeping account of the history of piracy. Now, he returns with a dramatic account of the real pirates of the Caribbean, and as his suspenseful narrative proves, the true stories behind the myths are at least as fascinating and gripping as the legends. Summary: The fundamental issue a child of up to about age 12 has—and that is expressed in ways that confound and aggravate parents—is that his or her left and right brain coordination is still developing, causing him to overreact and to see things in overly dramatic or black and white terms (i.e. tantrums, tears, inflexibility). But if cooks are not mindful with what they put into their slow cookers, they can easily end up with salt- and fat-laden meals. ...
